A BRIEF SKETCH OF CITY AND GRACELAND CEMETARIES.

Prior to 1835 Chicago had no stated place for the interment of the dead. In the summer of 1835 the city surveyor of the town was commissioned to select for cemetery purposes, property south and north of the town. A site was selected at the north end from property known as 'Milliman Tract'. This remained North Side City Cemetery until 1865.

In 1866 a tract of eighty acres lying just north of City Cemetery was taken over by the city, and $60,000 was spent on it in landscaping. This was opened to the public as a park in 1868 and it proved such a valuable addition to the city that City Cemetery was condemned. In February 1869 it was made part of the park. This area was from North Avenue, one and a half mile north, and a quarter of a mile wide, with the lake shore as a boundary to the east. It was an area of two hundred and thirty acres.

In 1860 Graceland Cemetery was given a charter by the State of Illinois and was established on a tract of one hundred and twenty five acres at Irving Park Road and Clark Street. This was in the township of Lake View.

Many bodies were transferred from City Cemetery to Graceland and in the following records, a (C) following the name and date signifies a transfer from City Cemetery. These transfers were at no stated time or period - one usually being done when another death of some particular family brought them to a new site in Graceland Cemetery.
